There are no members who claim deep interest in District matters, both in favor of and in opposition thereto, that it simply means trouble for a District chairman to put bills through without giving these members a chance to be heard, said a prominent Democratic member yesterday. "Up to the present the leaders have found it impracticable to hold a quorum of the House when there was nothing but District business for consideration. It is different now, however, for the members have had a long rest, and it occurs to me personally that the people of the District will find the House ready and willing to engage in legislation for their interests from now until the end of the extra session."
